The Structuring of Organizations Henry Mintzberg, 2009 Synthesizes the empirical literature on organizational structuring to answer the question of how organizations structure themselves --how they resolve needed coordination and division of labor. Organizational structuring is defined as the sum total of the ways in which an organization divides and coordinates its labor into distinct tasks. Further analysis of the research literature is needed in order to build a conceptual framework that will fill in the significant gap left by not connecting a description of structure to its context: how an organization actually functions. The results of the synthesis are five basic configurations (the Simple Structure, the Machine Bureaucracy, the Professional Bureaucracy, the Divisionalized Form, and the Adhocracy) that serve as the fundamental elements of structure in an organization. Five basic parts of the contemporary organization (the operating core, the strategic apex, the middle line, the technostructure, and the support staff), and five theories of how it functions (i.e., as a system characterized by formal authority, regulated flows, informal communication, work constellations, and ad hoc decision processes) are theorized. Organizations function in complex and varying ways, due to differing flows -including flows of authority, work material, information, and decision processes. These flows depend on the age, size, and environment of the organization; additionally, technology plays a key role because of its importance in structuring the operating core. Finally, design parameters are described - based on the above five basic parts and five theories - that are used as a means of coordination and division of labor in designing organizational structures, in order to establish stable patterns of behavior. (CJC).
